Series on the Mass, Part 78

Communion of the Priest, cont'd. After reciting the humble prayer of the centurion, the priest prays: "May the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ preserve my soul to life everlasting. Amen." Yes, it truly is the Body of Jesus that we receive, the Body that the Jews saw in its natural aspect, which was crucified and then arose from the dead. But here we have the accidents; that is, what is perceptible to the senses (form, taste, color...) which remain of the bread; while the substance; that is, the profound reality that makes a thing to be what it is, is the Body of our Lord. The Blood, Soul and Divinity are present in the consecrated Bread, but they are present in virtue of what St. Thomas calls "concomitance", that is a walking together (Our Lord is present in the Host as He is in heaven now). Here "Lord" is used in the same way as in the Gloria earlier in the Mass, when we said "Thou only art the Lord", meaning that He is God.

The liturgical movements at this time also emphasize the real presence since the priest genuflects before taking up the particles of the host to consume them, and, as he says the prayer, he makes the sign of the cross with the sacred host. This sign of the cross makes us think of the crucifixion that our Lord underwent for us, but now we receive Him as He is in heaven, resurrected and seated at the right hand of the Father.

During the priest's communion, we should be striving to inflame that burning love and affection that we should have when we receive our Lord: "with high devotion and with burning love and with all due affection of the heart, I desire to receive You, Lord, as many saints and devout persons who most pleased Thee by the holiness of their life and were in most burning devotion to Thee have desired Thee in their Communion..." (from The Imitation of Christ, Bk 4, Ch 17).

Sincerely in Christ,

Rev. Charles Van Vliet, FSSP
