Series on the Mass, Part 79

Priest's Communion of the Precious Blood. The priest remains recollected for a few moments after consuming the host, and then he uncovers the chalice, leaning the pall on the altar card or placing it on the altar itself, and genuflects. He takes the paten and looks for particles of the host that might be on the corporal where the host was placed after the consecration. Then he purifies the paten with his index finger, wiping any particles into the chalice. Any particle of the consecrated host is the Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity of our Saviour, just as He is in the Host before the fraction. While the priest is purifying the corporal and paten, he recites the prayer "What shall I render to the Lord for all the things that He hath rendered to me?..." This prayer invokes in the priest a feeling of thanksgiving, something all should have when they communicate in the Body of the Lord.

The prayer is composed of two psalm verses. The first part is from Psalm 115, which reminds us that the Sacrifice of the Mass is a sacrifice of thanksgiving to God. The second part comes from Psalm 17 and presents the sacrifice as a defense against the devil and his minions. This defense against Satan is an important reason for receiving Holy Communion regularly and with great devotion. Our stronger union with God, which should result with every communion, helps weaken any influence the devil might have over us. It also helps us to be detached from this world and to overcome our own concupiscence.

The priest then consumes the Precious Blood using the same prayer that was used for receiving the host. The priest's communion in the Precious Blood is necessary and sufficient to complete the sacrifice of the Mass. Since the 12th century, the communion from the chalice for the faithful was not habitually given for practical reasons. The faithful are not to be disappointed, however, since in receiving the host they receive our Lord whole and entire, Body, Blood, Soul and Divinity. It would be a heresy to say we have not received our Lord completely unless we communicate under both species. This was clearly taught at the Council of Trent (Sess. XIII, ch. 3).

Sincerely in Christ,

Rev. Charles Van Vliet, FSSP
